Situation: In responding to the increasing costs of providing municipal services, many local officials are asking the question – “do we reduce the level of services, increase taxes, or draw down our reserve funds?” They also are recognizing that neighboring communities are facing many of the same issues since public safety, environmental pollution, and other critical issues cross municipal borders.

The Response: This series of workshops will provide municipal officials with a working knowledge of how local officials are choosing a more effective option for addressing the current situation – working cooperatively with other communities to maintain quality services.

Instructors: Each of the workshop sessions will be led by local officials who will share information on why and how they are successfully working together to provide public services effectively and efficiently.

Who should attend:

Governing body members, mayors, municipal managers and secretaries, department heads, municipal engineers and solicitors, authority members, planning commissioners and other officials interested in the topics.
